Celine, Xavier, and two-year-old Nayla Pasche – in the child carrier trailer – about to tackle the South Island high country. They will relate their experience in Christchurch tonight.

Couple to tell of global adventure

With five years and more than 50,000 kilometres under their bike tyres behind them, Swiss couple Xavier and Celine Pasche – and two-year-old Nayla, born en route – are poised to tackle the South Island high country.

And they will be relating the story of their adventure at the CPIT Lecture Theatre S169 at 7.30pm tonight.

These latter-day nomads left Switzerland on August 1, 2010, with no small project in mind – to reach New Zealand on their bicycles... except for the necessary boat or airplane.

After three years on the road, they welcomed their daughter, Nayla, in Malaysia.

Following a seven-month break there, they procured a child carrier trailer for baby and kept on going. Almost two, little Nayla is reputed to be remarkably easygoing, with an adaptable nature. Her home is where her parents are.

Since leaving Europe and finally reaching New Zealand, the couple feel that what started as a project has become their way of life.

Nayla enjoys the great Australian outdoors on her way to New Zealand.
